

Dawn

Before the morning broke upon us
 Before the darkness knew to run
 You were whispering through the shadows
 Of a light that was to come
 Dawn was hiding in the pages
 Breaking slowly through the night
 Through a thousand human ages
 You were drawing us to light

A little light between the pages
 A little more with every dawn
 You were there inside the questions
 In every shadow, leading on
 A little light between the pages
 A little more with every dawn
 We were learning how to see You
 Long before the night was gone

In the garden, in the exile
 In the blood, and in the flame
 Through the prophets and the poets
 You kept teaching us to see
 That every story held a glimmer
 Every question left a trace
 All the scattered light was shining toward the mystery of God

A little light between the pages
 A little more with every dawn
 You were there inside the questions
 In every shadow, leading on
 A little light between the pages
 A little more with every dawn
 We were learning how to see You
 Long before the night was gone

Through the beauty and the breaking
 Through the wrestling and the pain
 Every little light was turning
 Toward a path that had a name
 Something brighter than our knowing
 Something mercy-shaped and strange
 Every glimpse became a doorway
 Enter in and bring your shame

When I lose You in the letters
 When the shadows hide Your heart
 Walk beside me through the story
 Show me who You really are
 When the pages pull against me
 When the words refuse their place
 Take me down the road Emmaus
 Let me read them through Your face

A little light between the pages
 A little more with every dawn
 We were learning how to see You
 Long before the night was gone

Then the morning stood before us
 And the dawn became a face
 Every road had led us to You
 Every fear gave way to grace
 What had whispered through the ages
 Now walked with us in the dust
 This great story we had questioned
 Turned to wonder, turned to trust
